Why breed a dog with G1: Retinal Dysplasia (Folds)?

Retinal Dysplasia is usually transmitted as an autosomal-recessive condition; this means that a dog must inherit two copies of an abnormal gene (one from its mother and one from its father) before it is affected. No gene mutation has been found that can cause RD. Some scientists have suggested that more than one gene mutation may be responsible and that RD is inherited in a more complex way than was originally thought.

As far as eye issues go, this condition is not considered, in most instances, to impact the welfare of an affected individual.

In short, Dr. Ruth Marrion, the ophthalmologist who examined Scanlan, told us that this is not worthy of taking an otherwise completely health cleared dog from breeding. When bred with a female who has been cleared through OFA Eye Exam by an Ophthalmologist, it will not be an issue.

While explaining this to me, Scanlan was more than happy to love up to her, and she was adamant about saying that he would still be a wonderful stud male. Just breed him selectively with cleared girls!
